Journals Project

The 1000 Journals Project is an ongoing collaborative experiment attempting to follow 1000 journals throughout their travels. The goal is to provide a method for interaction and shared creativity among friends and strangers.

How does it work?

The project officially launched in August of 2000 with the release of the first 100 journals in San Francisco. Artist Someguy gave them to friends and left them at bars, cafes and on park benches. Shortly thereafter, people began emailing him, asking if they could participate. So Someguy started sending journals to folks, allowing them to share with friends, or strangers. It’s been a roller coaster ever since.
Families are invited to contribute to a class journal.
Each family can contribute a maximum of four pages.
One class will share each journal.
We will track the circulation of the journal to ensure it keeps moving.
Families will have the journal from Wednesday to Wednesday.
Start thinking of ideas now.
We recommend looking at youtube clips about the 1000 journals project.
Share something about you and your family ... be creative......
Journals will be returned for display before the end of our centenary year...

This is where I want to be here in the garden, with flowers blooming, birds and butterflies, and lavender, searching for nectar!

Here I am dreaming.
